Dear Michael,

I have been reading some of your views on the identity of indiscernibles lately, and that leads me to ask if you could possibly do me a considerable favour and read some of this for me. You will see that I discuss your views in Part II, and I am interested in whether I have stated your position correctly and whether I have missed anything crucial about the physics. There is no need for you to read Part III, but I am afraid that you will need to read Part I in order to understand my terminology in Part II. If you could possibly let me have some views on this, I would be most grateful.

With best wishes,

Yours,

Richard Swinburne
